For nearly 20 years, Bill Hirsch conducted a varied architectural practice in Delaware, designing commercial buildings, offices, churches and residential projects. While acknowledging that this wide range of experience gave him a broad base of knowledge, Bill admits his first true love is designing custom homes. In 1994, he began working at Governors Club; in 1997, he followed his dream and relocated to North Carolina.

"My approach is to work closely with my clients - not just to create a great house, but to create their new 'home' - customized to their personal tastes and needs. I find it challenging as well as rewarding to design homes in a variety of styles, letting the design reflect the vision of my client. A close interactive relationship with my client - an understanding of their lifestyle, dreams and desires - this is what will produce a truly unique and custom home."

Dear Bill,

...a sincere expression of gratitude for your kindness and expertise...your creativity and professionalism certainly allowed us an attractive view.

Connie and Dick Larcher

It was a pleasure working with Bill. He has the ability to identify exactly what you are looking for, often uncovering ideas not foremost in your mind. Furthermore, he was able to work productively with the other members of our team (landscape architect, interior designer, etc.) and in the end produce what is uniquely "our home."

John and Marie Mitchell

In this world of ordinary architects, we're glad there is a Bill Hirsch. Bill guided us through the stressful building process with extraordinary professionalism and inspiration. We asked for a turret, and he designed two, incorporating a charming screened porch in the process. We asked for a three car garage, and he tucked two ample bedrooms above them. (Frequently, when we drive into the garage, we thank him for the extra wide doors.) We asked him for a cobble stone driveway, and he devised our Celtic court. We gave him a post card of a Dublin door, and now we have a grand welcome. We wanted an open great room, and he designed it with no obstructing pillars. We trusted him with our dream house, and it is that. He even won the Architectural Design Award for his Miller Project.

Don and Dorothy Miller

The process of designing and simultaneously constructing and articulating the design of our new home, has been a stimulating and delightful experience. We value and deeply appreciate your contributions as architect and more. We love the results!

Robert and Becky Berrey

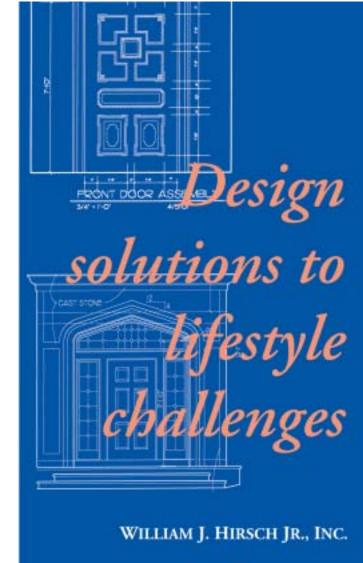

Bill made an extra effort to get beneath the surface to really understand our wants and needs, and then translated that understanding into a home design that was perfect. We relied on Bill to follow the project through to completion with the building contractor, and the house came in on time, on budget, and with no unhappy surprises. We couldn't have been more pleased with the process or the result.

Nina and Ed Comiskey

Bill is creative and fun to work with. He never settles; he persists until he finds the right answer. Bill and Linda Patchett

How does a list of wishes and hopes become a home, uniquely tailored to its owners? This can not happen by simply selecting a house plan from a magazine and making some adaptations. This can not happen when an architect works in semi-isolation from the clients. This only happens when the clients and the architect work together, as a team, examining options, discussing possibilities and letting their imaginations run freely.

My experience has taught me a great deal about how to build a very good house. But it is my clients who come to the process with the understanding of how they live, what they like and where they want to be. Sometimes people are very conscious of these issues and can list them easily. However, many of the more crucial issues are not as easily expressed. My process of interactive design with my clients allows us to discover everything about what their new home wants to be.

Every site and every client presents design challenges. These are our opportunities. The design solutions that we create make the new home a unique, appropriate and beautiful expression of my clients and their lives. I find the process to be gratifying and fun and I believe my clients do, too!

Designing solutions to lifestyle challenges.

"The design of a residence is a very personal and emotional process. I work with my clients as a team to develop a unique and appropriate home that reflects their tastes, needs and desires. While I am able to bring extensive experience and design skills to the process, any abilities I have are only best utilized through this interaction with my clients."
